IN MEMORY OF MICHELLE EAGER

No one can prevent what is destined to be. No one has the ability to alter the hands of time, or the road of fate. Maybe that's why it is so frustrating to accept the loss of a friend.

There are so many regrets and doubts a person faces when they lose someone that was special to them.

Currents of emotions swirl around you, and it seems as if you will never escape the endless sound of sorrow and pain. However, there is hope for every person that feels torn inside.

Remembering all the fun times you have shared with Michelle can help to brighten all dark spots that may have shadowed your heart. Be thankful for all the memories you are able to keep with you forever.

Being grateful for all the minutes that ticked by when she was here, and having fun can help to relieve the despair you may feel.

When you think of Michelle, remember to smile because that is the way she would have wanted it.

FACULTY

ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Don B. Hessler
Principal

Mr. William U. Meier
Assistant Principal

"Close" and "caring" are two words that describe this year's senior class. Scholarship is, of course, the primary goal of any class in any school. This year's class is demonstrating that they are continuing the trend of scholastic improvement at C.B. West; however, the unique characteristic of the class is their unity.

Although the informal groups that usually form within a class have formed, there seems to be a better across the board give and take between the groups. "Where are the senior tables?" was a question asked early on in the year by a senior delegation from the lobby. The tables were rounded up and placed in the lobby. It was not long before seniors from all the aforementioned groups crowded the tables for study and socializing.

An example of the closeness and caring in the senior class was demonstrated when all sorts of student groups, particularly seniors, presented their case in reference to the 30 minute versus 45 minute lunch periods. Comments like, "We don't have time to visit with our friends, we just eat and hurry to class," came out loudly and clearly.

The seniors have accepted their leadership role in the school well. The leaders and participants in all of the formally organized activities have shown a willingness to work together toward common goals. Success comes when people care a lot and are willing to work together. This year's seniors are that kind of group.

Time seemed to us an appropriate theme for a yearbook. It signifies so much from something as trivial as time to get to class (one minute), or time to get on with our lives.

A yearbook itself is like a time capsule containing pages of memories and snapshots of the past. This is an undertaking worth all the deadlines, aggravation and nervous breakdowns that accompany putting it together.

We hope you will enjoy this yearbook now and whenever you open it to recall the past and savor the memories within it.

— M. Stevens

Special thanks to Mrs. Lavinia and Mrs. Kott for all their help and patience and to the invaluable services of Mrs. Umlauf and her Typing III class.
